WANT TESTIMONY STRICKEN OUT

see that he was right in his estimate. As to the matter of the operating cost of the McIntyre building, Reidford was misinformed as to the figure, and the mistake was no fault of his.

Argument on the matter had not concluded when the court adjourned at noon, and will be continued during this afternoon's session.

Jury Inspects Premises.

When the court opened this morning the jury was taken to inspect the premises now occupied by Castle & Cooke. Everything was taken into consideration, and the various parts pointed out, so that when the case for Castle & Cooke is presented and testimony is being given, the jury will be able to intelligently follow the facts presented.

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Official Washington is wondering what Secretary of Agriculture Wilson will do now that he is the subject of so much attack. Owing to the President's action in the Dr. Wiley case it was thought that the veteran secretary would retire, but he denies any intention of resigning soon. He is seventy-six years old and has been continuously in the cabinet since 1897, having broken all records for holding such a position.

FINGERS WAG; ATTORNEYS TALK

The finger of argument, although not necessarily of scorn, was very much in evidence this morning during the hearing of the Mahuka site case before Judge Dole in the Federal court.

The jury had left the room and argument as to whether the testimony given by R. R. Reidford should be stricken from the records was fast and furious. Attorney Prosser managed to gain the floor during a moment when United States District Attorney Breckons was taking a breath, preparatory for the second round.

Prosser opened out at a speed of two hundred words a minute. For over that period of time he spoke without taking breath and all the time pointed his finger at Judge Dole. As he neared the end of the spurt the end of his finger was wobbling with the force of excitement within him. There was much to say, and all of it before Breckons could draw his breath. The finger wagged more excitedly as he beat the pistol and started on the second round.

Standing next to him was Breckons in his characteristic attitude. His mouth set for speaking, one arm held aloft and his long index finger pointing to the roof, ready when the time came to be raised aloft as far as his arm would take it. It was motionless but ready at any time to be raised, as during the argument in the Cederford murder trial when after each point was made it was hauled aloft and nailed to the mast while from down below came the roar of "Who tied?"

Standing over by the jury box was Attorney Olson. A smile rippled round his mouth and his finger, wagging excitedly, pointed at the judge. As Prosser waxed more and more eloquent Olson's finger wagged faster. It was like the tail of a cat when she smells a mouse. Right at the tip it vibrates fit to beat any wireless spark.

Those in the court watched the wagging fingers anxiously, then with amusement and finally a laugh broke out and the scene was over.

PERSONALITIES
MARKET SUPERINTENDENT S. T. STARRETT has been busy since his return from Maui in a number of lines of activity on behalf of small farming in Hawaii.

SANTA FE, N. M.—Governor-Elect W. C. McDonald, who pilots the new State on its start, owes his election partly to his personal popularity and partly to factional fights among the Republicans. The Legislature is Republican. Democratic and Republican papers have combined to urge that partisanship be dropped and that all lands unite in the interests of the new State. He was born in Herkimer county, New York, in 1858. He went to Fort Scott, Kan., in 1886 and while there was admitted to the bar. The same year he came to New Mexico. For ten years he did surveying and mining engineering and in 1899 took charge of the Carrizozo ranch and has held the position of manager ever since. He has a wife and one daughter.
